The University of Idaho is offering these seedlings in cooperation with the Colorado State Forest Service Nursery.

The nursery was established in 1957 and operates as a self funded enterprise within the umbrella of the Colorado State Forest Service and the Warner College of Natural Resources. They produce low cost seedlings for conservation efforts, and proudly serve the Fort Collins, Colorado area directly from the nursery.

The University of Idaho Extension office in your county can provide information on what plant species will work well in your area. Many also offer additional services which can be of great value for anyone interested in improving their land.

For more information, or to find an extension office in your area, please check online at: <http://www.uidaho.edu/extension>
